SOME NEW BOOKS.

first volume of the work. In "Roman Literature in Relation to Roman Arts" (Macmillan & Co.), the Rev. Robert Burn undertakes an examination of the literary and glyptic art of the Augustan age, with a view to exhibiting its faults and tracing their origin. He holds that the tendencies of the period were toward coarseness and ugliness, har-baric estentation, a rude liking for the colessal, and a general sense of confusion, due largely to the rapid changes wrought throughout the world by Roman con-quest, and the reaction of the new cosmopolitanism upon that severity of character which was national with the Romans. These contentions are supported with considerable learning and ingenuity, but the demonstration as regards Roman literature is inconclusive, and at best the theory is shown to possess some plausibility. The author does not sufficiently keep before him the fact that Koman art was at no period on the highest plane, and that in the decadent time of the Empire it possessed crudities which were clearly not the effect of retrogression, but manifesta-tions of an imperiect development. Mr. Burn's book is abundantly and beautifully illustrated by the photo-

A collection of encouraging and suggestive sermons by Wayland Hoyt has been published by Randolph, under the title of "The Brook in the Way."

The D. Lothrop Company publish "American Authors," by Amanda B. Harris, a series of pleasant sketches of some of the most distinguished of American History" (F. A. Stokes & Brother) than were ever colsected in one volume before. Many of Mr. Bellew's sketches, however, as shown therein, are full of funny classic and the first children's picture book, has been published in excellent scholarly style by C. W. Bardeen. The editor reminds us, through a quotation from Mather's "Magnalia," that Comenius came very near being president of Harvard College in 1654.

Appleton & Co. issue, in the International Scientific Series, an important little book by Professor Leone the writer is to supply materials for the codification of international law, and he has sought to supplement International law, and he has sought to supplement and round out the labors of Bluntschil and others in this direction. The rise of a belief in the ripeness of the time for such an undertaking may be regarded as a sign of progress, though it must be confessed that as regards many of the subjects which are here proposed for codification, the advance toward international understanding has not thus far been so marked as to justify vivid expectations for the immediate future. Professor Levi's well-arranged citations from treaties A. M., Principal.

Rev. HENRY REEVES, Pr. D., Principal. and conventions serve to indicate the extent of the progress toward general agreement, and his treatment of private international law, together with the list of treaties in the appendix, gives his book special value
